A GRATEFUL PEOPLE

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

Israel is a people that never forgets its benefactors. Humbly grateful are we Jews for every gesture of fellowship and good will that has ever been extended toward us. We are warmly appreciative of favors—even the very least of them. Nor is this difficult to understand. So numerous have been our detractors and defaming foes that it is small wonder that our few friends and loyal supporters should be greeted with wildest enthusiasm and everlasting gratitude. It is not strange that amid the darkness of our bitter past ever shadowed by the ominous clouds of an Amalek, a Haman, a Titus and a Torquemada, a Hillaire Belloc and a Henry Ford, that amid such ever threatening gloom the few stars of a Cyrus, a Reuchlin, a George Eliot, a Dr. Masaryk should gleam so radiantly upon the sable background of Israel's horizon. Centuries of persecution and inordinate hatred have made the Jew profoundly—sometimes perhaps just a bit too obsequiously—appreciative of the slightest intimation of friendliness on the part of the non-Jew.

And when the non-Jew has been instrumental in giving impetus to the realization of one of his deepest desires, when a Christian friend, by his vision and courage seeks to bring to fruition an age long dream, then 'Sal-v'chomer,' how much the more does Israel praise and glorify his name; how much the more passionately does Israel pay tribute to his memory as though he were nigh unto a god. Thus, it not surprising that the name of James Arthur Balfour is today being memorialized and apotheosized in every corner of the earth where Jewish hearts are burdened, because their friend and champion treads no more this mortal coil.

That the Jew should be grateful is not strange; but that he who has ever been skeptical of personality and credulous only of the loftiest of principles should suddenly enshrine Lord Balfour as a patron saint of Israel is a bit startling to say the least. It is somewhat disturbing to listen to these lavish panegyrics of praise, flowing from the lips of one of America's staunchest liberals and truest democrats, which maintain not merely that Lord Balfour was a noble friend of the Jew and a heroic vindicator of Jewish rights, all of which is decidedly true, but that he was "one of the greatest figures in contemporary history," which is decidedly not true. Great indebted as we Jews must feel for the benefactions secured and guaranteed largely through his intercession, there is no reason why we should miserably distort the facts of history or enshrine in our memory as the greatest souls of contemporary history either Lord Balfour or a Clemenceau, a Jan Smuts, a Lloyd George, all of whom the eminent champion of the masses of men mentioned above chooses to single out as significant names for Israel's modern pantheon. We could think of persons whose careers were a bit more in conformity with Israel's ideals than these old line diplomatists. A MacDonald would suit us better,—as would Romain Rolland. But that is beside the point.

The fact of the matter is that the world as a whole will not long remember Balfour, for the simple reason that he was pathetically out of step with the march of modern democratic ideas and ideals. He was the last of the Victorian aristocrats who never felt the beat of the pulsating heart of the great masses of men. "His greatest vigor as a political fighter was always displayed in defense of the old order. The movement against privilege and in favor of better conditions and social justice undoubtedly made him apprehensive," writes Lord Ponsonby in last week's issued of The Nation. "Neither in the field of industrial and economic politics, nor in the serious constitutional problems which occurred in his time, nor yet in relation to the complexities of international relations, will any attainment of lasting value be placed by historians to the credit of Arthur James, Earl of Balfour," the article unambiguously concludes. And John Haynes Holmes in his "Palestine, Today and Tomorrow" is even more devastating in his denunciation of this spokesman and partisan of the status quo: "This distinguished English nobleman (Lord Balfour) never had an unselfish emotion in his life and never anywhere served any great humanitarian cause. He has ever been as consistently cynical in his statesmanship as he is agnostic in his philosophy. The common people, Jew and Gentile, have never existed in his world, save as a nuisance and occasionally a danger. He would harry the Jews of Palestine today as ruthlessly as he harried the patriots of Ireland yesterday, if they disturbed the interests or threatened the peace of British rule."

Holmes is undoubtedly a bit hyperbolic; he has been carried away by his hatred of the society and standard for which Lord Balfour stood; his judgment has been slightly warped by his contempt for the antiquated system of strategy and secret connivance which this man ever espoused, but we know sufficient of Balfour's arbitrary tactics in Ireland in the 'eighties' which gained for him the questionable title of Bloody Balfour; we have likewise sufficient knowledge of his scheming at Versailles which, due to "his want of directness and his inability to recognize the great fundamental principles upon which alone recovery could proceed, undoubtedly increased the misunderstanding which produced friction among the Allies," and which more than anything else "misled Wilson at the council table"; we know enough in short of Balfour's political career, to be shocked by the declaration that he was "one of the greatest figures in contemporary history." We do not agree with Holmes that he never served a humanitarian cause for, regardless of whatever motives others may attribute to him, he sought sedulously at the Washington Disarmament Conference to limit arms, to abolish the submarine and to outlaw poison gas. And besides, it must be admitted all shortcomings aside, he steadfastly and selflessly aided the Jew.

We understand therefore the Jews' gratitude. We comprehend the grief and sorrow where with the Jewish masses mourn his loss. To them he was a veritable Messiah, leading them out of ghetto and pale into the Promised Land. Their tears we do not question. But among the leaders who, in every other instance detest such diplomacy and plutocracy as were his guiding principles, surely their worshipful and grandiloquent commendation of his career as a whole smacks less of homage or of grief than of propaganda and of ballyhoo.

But recognizing the limitations of the man set by the very circumstances of his birth and social caste, it is gratifying indeed that he so fearlessly and frankly championed the Jewish cause. Not as politician, not as liberal, not as the greatest figure upon our contemporary scene, but as one of those rare friends of the Jew, he is worthy of our deepest praise.

Attractive Fire-Safe Concrete Floors Throughout Every Home

THIS ideal construction method is nearer to actuality than many think. With it will come perfect assurance from anxiety with regard to fire, particularly on evenings away from home.

Concrete floors involve little additional cost; yet offer wide artistic scope. The floor may be finished in hardwood, tile or linoleum, or the concrete itself may be finished to take a wax polish.

Whatever finish is adopted, a warm, waterproof floor results, together with the highest degree of fire-safety known to modern construction.

We have an attractive booklet showing the possibilities of concrete for home construction with particular reference to floors. Write for a copy.

SUCCESSION DUTIES REDUCED ON SMALL SUMS AND INCREASED ON LARGE ESTATES.
Burden Being Shifted From Weak to Strong.

Mr. Clarence Michaels, who is well known in the Jewish community, and who in his private capacity, is the District Manager of the National Life Insurance Co. of Canada, has favoured us with the following article in connection with Succession Duties in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Michaels has made a very extensive study of the laws of the Province of Quebec insofar as they relate to Succession Duties, Partnership Agreements, Business Life Insurance &c. and he informs us that a very large majority of the wealthier members of our community have given very little or no attention to what effect the Succession Duties Bill would have on their estate in the event of their death.

According to the new Bill there will be no tax on estates of less than $25,000, provided they are left to the wife or children, father or mother, of the deceased. The taxes then commence at 1% and gradually increase in the direct line to 10%, with an additional tax of from 1½% to 15% wherever more than $50,000 is left to any one heir.

It will be interesting to our readers to study the comparison of taxation under the old and the new law, which is given in this article. These figures apply only to estates left in the direct line, and where money is left to more distant relatives or strangers the rate of taxation is greatly increased, running in some instances to as high as 40%.

The new Bill provides that there will be no tax on any money left to recognised charities incorporated in the Province of Quebec.

In addition to these taxes imposed by the Province of Quebec there is always the question of certain assets or securities being also taxed by Other Provinces, Foreign Countries or States.

There are many legitimate means by which this taxation can be kept down to the minimum, and Mr. Michaels has authorised us to state that his services and experience gained from years of study, are at the disposal of our readers at any time in connection with this subject, without any obligation whatsoever.

The table of taxes referred to above is as follows:—

Illustration of Amendments to Quebec Succession Duties Act.

In view of the importance of the proposed amendments to the Quebec Succesession Duties Act, the following comparison of the rates on estates of various sizes under the present Act and under the proposed Act is given as a matter of interest.

The rates given are those for a married man with three children whose entire estate is situated in the Province of Quebec and who leaves the income to his wife for life and the capital after her death in equal shares to his three children.

| Net Value of Estate | Tax under present plan | Tax under new plan |
|---|---|---|
| $ 15,000 | No Tax | No Tax |
| 25,000 | $ 250 | No Tax |
| 55,000 | 750 | 2,750 |

Dr Levin Speaks Under Habonim Auspices

History is the key to the psychoanalysis of a people, for every individual is the heir of his forefathers, both in the physical and in the mental field. Dr. Shmarya Levin, noted literateur, stated, in his address, "Psycho-analysis of a People," delivered in the Windsor Hall, Sunday night, March 30. The lecture was given under the auspices of the Zionist Order Habonim, in celebration of the fifth anniversary of the opening of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

An adherent of the Freudian theory of psycho-analysis, Dr. Levin commenced his lecture by drawing illustrations from Biblical tales, showing that in the dream lies the key to the character of the individual. "To understand himself, to make of himself a freer and happier being, the individual goes to his dreams, for they are the key to the world of the unknown — his character. He analyses his dreams, he makes out of visionary figures living ones. Thus he comes to a complete understanding of his ego," he said.

Dr. Levin emphasized that this truth leads the individual naturally to conclude that the development of a people necessitates the possession of their own land, where they might devote themselves to the study of their language and their culture. This he pointed out was what the Jews were doing at present, in establishing their own homeland in Palestine.

The meeting which was opened by R. A. Darwin, Supreme Nassi of the Zionist Order Habonim, was also in the nature of a memorial meeting of the late Lord Balfour. Following the singing of the memorial hymn for the dead, by Cantor D. Katzman, Louis Fitch K.C., vice-president of the Zionist Organization of Canada, spoke on those qualities of the great British statesman which had made him beloved both by Jew and by non-Jew.

ARABS BLAMED BY COMMISSION FOR OUTBREAK IN PALESTINE

At London, March 31 The Palestine Commission made public its report on the disorders in Palestine last year, holding that the outbreak was from the beginning an attack by Arabs on Jews, but that it was not premeditated.

The report said the Arabian Grand Mufti must accept some responsibility, adding that the part he took in formation of societies for the defence of Moslem holy places "was influenced by a two-fold desire—to annoy Jews and to mobolize Moslem opinion on the issue of the Wailing Wall. He had no intention of utilizing this religious campaign as a means of inciting disorder. But inasmuch as the movement which he in part created became, through force of circumstances, a not unimportant factor in events which led to the outbreak, the Mufti, like many others who directly or indirectly played upon public feeling in Palestine must accept a share in responsibility for the disturbances."

The riots last summer apparently originated in trouble over the historic Wailing Wall, long a sacred place for the Jews, but now part of a mosque. A total of 133 Jews and 116 Arabs were killed, while 339 Jews and 232 Arabs were wounded.

While holding that the outbreak was not a revolt against British authority in Palestine, the report recommended that a clear statement of policy by the British Government was essential to good Government and it urged that such a statement be made soon.

The Government also was urged to appoint shortly another commission, under authority of Article 14 of the Palestine mandate, to determine the rights of claims to the Wailing Wall as a measure of essential peace and good Government. The report recalled that the League of Nations had agreed to such procedure.

Steps should be taken, the commission advised, to insure that Government officials watch for inflammatory articles in the Palestine press, and to empower them to prosecute where articles tending to breach of the peace are published. An adequate intelligent service was advocated to check activities of racial agitators.

The report specified that non-Jewish rights be protected in Palestine.

"Our recommendations regarding immigration and land questions," says the report, "are largely based on the assumption that in a definition of policy His Majesty's Government will clearly state that the rights and position of non-Jewish communities in Palestine are to be fully safeguarded."

The commission further states that "the complaint that the Palestine Government have consistently shown lack of sympathy toward the establishment of a Jewish national home and their policy has been one of weakness is, in large measure, due to difficulties inherent in the mandate and to failure to appreciate the dual nature of the policy which the Government had to administer.

"It is our view that the Government did discharge, to the best of their ability, the difficult task of maintaining a neutral and impartial attitude, between two peoples whose leaders have shown little capacity to compromise."

Prime Minister MacDonald and Lord Passfield, secretary for the Dominions, received the Arab delegation, March 31. The meeting was described officially as "a general chat on the situation."

The report says that there is no evidence that the Mufti issued any requests to the Moslems of Palestine to come to Jerusalem on August 23 and that no connection has been established between the Mufti and the work of those who were either known, or thought to have been engaged in agitation and incitement.

Referring to the Zionist complaints against the Palestine Arab executive, it concludes that the charges of premeditation and organization of the disturbances are not proved against the Palestine Arab executive and "if made in relation to the actual events of August 23 and the following days are negatived by the known facts.

"But," adds the report, "for their failure to make an attempt during the week preceding the disturbances to control their followers, to declare publicly and emphatically that they were on the side of law and order, neither the Grand Mufti nor the Palestine Arab executive can be acquitted of blame."

As to H. C. Luke, acting High Commissioner of Palestine during the riots, criticized by the Zionists on the ground that he did not obtain reinforcements from neighboring countries before August 23, the report says that "it is our view that it would have been a reasonable precaution if Luke had mobilized the troops within his jurisdiction at some convenient place in Palestine some time during the days which immediately preceded the disturbances. But for reasons which we have explained elsewhere we do not think that any serious criticism can be properly levied against Luke for his failure to adopt this course.

"We endorse Luke's action in declining to arm a considerable number of Jewish people whose services were offered on the 17th. We are satisfied that in taking his decision that 41 special Jewish constables should be disarmed, Luke was following the highest military advice available to him and using his own unbiased judgment as to the line of action which was best calculated to serve the interests of the people with whose well-being he was charged."

On the subject of immigration the report affirms that Jewish enterprise and Jewish immigration "have conferred material benefits upon Palestine in which the Arab people share."

"We consider, however, that the claims and demands, which from the Zionist side had been advanced, regarding the future of Jewish immigration into Palestine, had been such as to arouse among the Arabs apprehension that they will in time be deprived of their livelihood and pass under the political domination of the Jews.

"We further consider that Sir John Campbell was right when he reported that the crisis of 1927-28 was due 'to the fact that immigrants came into Palestine in excess of the economic absorbing power of the country.' There is incontestable evidence that in the matter of immigration there has been a serious departure by the Jewish authorities from the doctrine accepted by the Zionist organization in 1922 that immigration should be regulated by the economic capacity of Palestine to absorb new arrivals.

"In conjunction with other and more immediate causes for the disturbances, the feeling of Arab apprehension caused by Jewish immigration was a factor which contributed to the outbreak."

SOCIAL WORK PRAISED

The was given the Young Men's Social and Athletic Club in recognition of the work they are doing in helping underprivileged children in the creches and orphanages, by A. E. Cadman, president of the Lions Club, who addressed the members of the Y.M.S.A. at their seventh annual dinner dance, at the Mount Royal Hotel on Saturday night, March 29.

Mr. Cadman stressed the fact that Canada was one of the richest, if not the richest country in the world and stated that the 20th century belonged to Canadians. Canada, thirty or forty years ago, was not a significant factor in world affairs, but at the outbreak of the war it had proved its true worth and a country to be reckoned with, and was among the leading nations of the world when the armistice was signed. "Service clubs are closely affiliated to the service of the country.

L. Ritz, past president of the Y.M.S.A. spoke. The debating cup was awarded to L. Ritz. The most outstanding cup, it was announced, was the Richstone Trophy, which is awarded each year to a member who has done the best all-round work. This cup was awarded last year for the first time to M. H. Brotman and this year to N. R. Babins.

IN THE CAUSE OF ADULT JEWISH EDUCATION

The Temple Emanu-El College of Jewish Studies ended its second season of activities last Monday evening. This school for adults has won a place for itself in the heart of Jewish Montreal. During the two years of its existence it has attracted hundreds. Even non-Jewish men and women have attended classes in Jewish thought. Some of the students have written letters of appreciation regarding the splendid work of the College. I publish these without comment since they are self explanatory.

"The College has been a great inspiration to me personally and I am heartily sorry that the session has come to an end. The broadminded attitude of the lecturers who invite criticism, who do not muzzle frankness, has been a wonderful encouragement to me.

Well do I realize that to know people leads to a better understanding—and you and our friends at the College bade us welcome, for which I thank you.

Great oaks from little acorns grow"

Surely the Temple is one of the spiritual centres which will help to bring us nearer to the day when Humanity will sense the Oneness of all Life."

Flora M. Steele

"May I be permitted to express my appreciation of the Cultural effects I have attained from the attendance of your class during the last few months.

I find your rudiment of teaching very helpful, particularly, I find it has awakened in me the desire to continue the study of Jewish culture and literature which the College offers, and of which we may all be justly proud.

I am anticipating continuing these lessons, and would gladly recommend anyone who is interested in spending a pleasant and profitable evening to attend your class."

Anne Wiseman

"As a student in your classes for Jewish Studies at Temple Emanu-El I am sending these few lines to you in appreciation of them.

They have been a source of great instruction and enlightenment. The good comradeship and fellowship between teachers and students has been very enjoyable and helpful.

At the closing of the sessions you invited me to say a few words. I esteem it the greatest honour and privilege ever accorded me. I was introduced as "a Christian looking in". To you I may have appeared as one "looking in"—yet I, myself, always felt as one of you.

The open door made by you, whereby those of another race and faith can meet and mingle with one another, receive instruction, discuss and question the Truths to be found in the ancient Scriptures, is a great aid and means to remove and break down barriers of race and creeds.

I am quoting the words at the end of Jacob Wasserman's book which was so ably lectured upon during the course of this season's studies by Miss Meyer; "That we may have tolerance one with another". One of our fellow students said he preferred the word understanding better. How is understanding to come about unless, in the first instance, we show tolerance one to another and are willing to listen to another's point of view. Let both Christian and Jew alike have hearts warmed by love—one towards the other—that they be willing to extend the hand of friendship—a willing ear—an open mind—so to reason together on spiritual things—which is the main issue for the well being of mankind the world over.

I pray the day will soon be when, in the words of the Prophet Isaiah, every bond will be broken and every yoke will be lifted. When the Christian will be willing to turn the pages of the Hebrew Bible to see what truths can be found there—and the Jew come over and delve for a while into Christian testimony. Then we shall all be happier people and as the "Little Man Jesus", the teacher, bade us to do—We shall find in each soul a brother—and God, the Great Jehovah—The One Father of us all.

THE PALESTINE COMMISSION REPORTS

The long awaited report of the Commission regarding the disturbance last August in Palestine is now made public. As reports go—it is a most diplomatic interpretation of sad events. The Arabs are held responsible for having started the attack upon Jews and of course the Palestinian administration is not to be held responsible now. What next? Will the mandatory power soon make clear its position regarding its policy of a National Jewish Homeland in Palestine? That is most important right now. How soon will the powers that be once for all determine the Jewish rights at the Wailing Wall? Immediate action is essential for the good of all concerned. In what practical manner will Great Britain assist in an increased Jewish immigration to Palestine?

Rabbi Eisendrath's Editorial

Though history may ere-long efface his name from the roster of its noblest sons, Israel will never forget. Her people will make pilgrimage to his grave. His name will be inscribed in golden letters upon the 'Sepher Ha Hayim', her ledger of life. The dreamers of the ghetto will ever praise a kindly Providence for having granted to this child of Britain the breadth of vision and the tenacity of purpose to have given impetus to the task so vital to Israel's tearful destiny. The sons of Zion will ever rise up to call him blessed, and until the end of time, his name will occupy forever a unique and luminous place in Israel's saga.

When will the world learn this lesson? When will it befall Israel gathered at Balfour's bier as though it were a shrine? When will the peoples perceive Israel's overflowing gratitude? When will they discern how responsive is our people to every semblance of kindliness, to every gesture of good will? When will they understand that human decency, justice, and fair play will evoke in the Jew everlasting gratitude and appreciation without stint. Why, why are the nations so blind? When will Balfours arise in every place to emancipate the Jew, to vindicate his name, to set right an ancient wrong in every nation, and to make of all the earth his Promised Land?

Corporation News

Net earnings of the Brazilian Traction Light and Power Company for the month of February amounted to $2,167,136, as compared with $2,154,344 in February of last year, representing an increase of $12,792. In January there was reported a slight decrease which followed twenty-seven consecutive monthly gains in net.

For the month of February net earnings of the Southern Canada Power Company amounted to $121,362 as compared with $120,429 in February of last year, an increase of $933. This constitutes the forty-first consecutive gain in monthly net to be recorded by this utility.

Interests close to Famous Players Canadian Corporation, state there have been no negotiations for the purchase of the company by U. S. interests. A sale is unlikely even if an offer is made.

Concrete evidence of the beneficial effects of the Canadian Hydro-Electric Corporation, Limited, expansion programme is reflected in a reported increase of 50 per cent. in its earnings since the close of their fiscal year.

Increased mining activities particularly in the Kirkland Lake and Rouyn fields, is reflected in the earnings of Canada Northern Power Corporation for February, these being an increase in gross of $12,324 for the month, as compared with February of last year.

Another link in the rounding out of Western Steel Products, Limited, Dominion-wide chain of subsidiaries was effected by the acquisition of George W. Reed and Company, Limited, of Montreal. It is understood that the deal involves approximately $1,000,000.

It is stated authoritatively that if reports of disposal by International Utilities of its Canadian operating subsidiaries are true, Nesbitt, Thomson interests will be the purchasers. Power Corporation is already substantial holder of International Utilities shares and has long had an eye on the western properties owned by the company, the acquisition of which would round out the big holding company.

Marked progress during 1929 is revealed in the annual report of Canadian General Electric Company presented to the shareholders at the annual general meeting, by A. E. Dyment, chairman of the board, and D. C. Durland, president. New Business booked, shipments and sales billed show increases over 1928 and were the highest in the company's history, while unfilled orders at December 31 were 25% higher than at the end of 1928.

Increased volume of sales and appreciation of the sound financial position of Charles Gurd & Company, Limited, are the only apparent reasons for the activity and strength in the stock of the company, according to W. R. Gurd, vice-president, who denies emphatically the rumor that Canada Dry Ginger Ales is making overtures for acquisition of the company.

Hope for Higher Newsprint Before End of Next Year

FROM sources close to the industry it is understood that prospects for an increase in the prices of newsprint this year are anything but bright. American publishers have threatened to curtail their regular orders for Canadian newsprint at least ten per cent, if the Canadian group of mills persist in their plans for raising the price of their product. They maintain that they can readily carry on under these conditions without in any way affecting their advertising.

Present indications are that there will be no change in the existing schedule of prices this year, and there is even the probability that matters will be no further advanced during the first part of the next year. Canadian mills are under too heavy a handicap as regards the law of supply and demand. Their only salvation is the chance that the demand will catch up with the supply.

The attitude of the American is that there is no economic justification for a rise in price of newsprint. With mills running under capacity and at that more than keeping pace with the demand, they feel that matters would be better left alone for the time being.

That there is a greater spirit of co-operation than ever between the Canadian mills is quite evident. The unfortunate part of this state of affairs is that they cannot translate the present goodwill into immediate results. They do, however, look forward to a lightening of their burden by the middle of next year, and are at present concentrating on ways and means to accomplish their purpose.

In the meantime, with mill operations at a low level—some plans are reported operating under 50 per cent capacity—further mergers are seen as the only solution of the situation. Good progress is reported to have been made in the International Paper-Abitibi consolidation, and the early consummation of the St. Lawrence-Brompton-Lake St. John merger is, it is understood likely to be followed by a more comprehensive tie-up. The possibility is seen of strong Canadian interests entering the U.S. field, through the acquisition of U.S. mills, with the ultimate possibility of two major groups in control of the industry in both countries.

Mining & Oil

Comments of the management of the International Nickel Company point to continued great expansion in the market for nickel. As the market for the metal grows, output of nickel, copper and precious metals can grow. Practically a world market has been established for nickel and its alloys, but the scope of consumption and variety of uses to which they are put are generally regarded as being in their initial stages.

A surplus of $174,936 is shown by Venturtes, Limited, in its first annual report covering the company's operations since incorporation in January 1928, to December 31st, 1929.

Mining Corporation's annual report is now in process of preparation and will be issued to stockholders around the first of next month. It is expected that profits will be shown at a lower figure, due to the reduced price of silver which prevailed during the year.

From Rouyn comes news that Amulet has started a further diamond drilling campaign in an area which yielded interesting drill cores about two or three years ago. The mineralization was not regarded as important at that time.

Little significance is attached to the result of diamond drilling which has been carried out on the Central Manitoba property during the last few months and there is little possibility of any enlargement of the mill this season. The directors have decided on a vigorous development campaign for 1930 and the supplies for this will be shipped to the property immediately.

A Northern engineering service wires to the effect that diamond drilling at the Aldermac has encountered over 80 feet of ore averaging more than 4 p.c. copper in the No. 4 ore body between the 250 and 500 foot horizons. The ore where encountered to the east is said to add greatly to the length of No. 4 ore body.

Freehold No. 2 well, a short distance southeast of Home, is now reported drilling at about 63 feet in the lime. The formation is said to be somewhat hard but some showings of ore have been encountered.

American Jewry Contributes to Jewish Spiritual Life, Says Speaker

Speaking at Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, on "Our Contributions to Jewish Spiritual Life," Prof. Louis Finkelstein, of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, told of the spiritual contributions now in the process of crystallization in the life of New World Jewry.

The Jews of America have been very generous with their money, having spent millions and tens of millions of dollars in the last decade or more toward the alleviation of their less fortunate brethren overseas. They have also invested huge fortunes in the building up of philanthropic institutions on this continent. In this way they have made a real practical contribution to Jewish life that should not be underestimated. But at best, the speaker said, this contribution by its very nature is material, helping largely the economic readjustment of those elements in Jewry that have suffered on account of a world catastrophe. While they have been making this important material contribution to Jewish life, have the American Jews also been doing anything in the way of contributing to Jewish spiritual life?

It is difficult as yet to give a complete answer to this question, but there are evident signs pointing toward a new mode of Jewish living now in the process of crystallization. The increase in the number of large and expensive buildings to house synagogues, Jewish centers, Y.M. H.A.'s, and the like, would not be warranted unless these institutions also represented an advance in the cultural and spiritual life of the Jew.

One of the fundamental differences between life in the Old World and life in America is the freedom that the Jew enjoys here as a citizen of the country on an equality with his neighbour. This from the beginning removed the possibility of ghetto life, and Jewish public opinion which so thoroughly controlled the life of the individual in the Jewish communities of the Old World, can no longer be counted on to exert its former influence. Thus, a Jew in America remains a Jew by choice, and not by force of Jewish public opinion as was the case formerly. Every Jewish act of his may rightly be termed voluntary. Attendance at the Synagogue, the Jewish education of children, membership in Jewish organizations—all these have become matters of choice with each individual. The American Jew is destined to make an outstanding contribution to Judaism in the very development of this mode of Jewish living based on voluntary acts and motivated by an intelligent understanding of what Judaism is. In order to achieve this, every effort must be made to explain thoroughly the significance of the Jewish contributions of the past—the deeper meaning of Judaism—so that the individual Jew will willingly accept and practice this Judaism within in any way interfering with his adjustment to the demands of American civilization, said Prof. Finkelstein.

Health Service

CLEANLINESS

Cleanliness, which is essential to health, is something more than a matter of aesthetics. It means cleanliness within and without. It includes the removal of all waste matter produced in the body, as well as freedom from dirt on the outer surfaces of the body.

If the skin is to function properly, the pores must not be blocked; they must be kept clean by the regular bathing of the body.

It is probably true that a large majority of people do not drink sufficient water. A glass or two of water before breakfast and between meals is a habit which should be cultivated. In this way, the required intake of water will be secured and, in addition, the habit will be found to be of very real assistance in overcoming faulty bowel elimination.

Constipation is one of the most common complaints of the human family. It represents self-neglect and failure to develop a habit which can be established if simple rules are persisted in until the regular habit is established.

The most important consideration is the establishment of the habit. The taking of food is a natural stimulus to bowel action and, therefore, a natural time for evacuation is a half-hour after a meal. There is some difference of opinion as to how many movements there should be daily, but there should be one at least. The toilet must be visited at exactly the same hour every day whether or not there is an urge to go.

In addition to the regular toilet habit and the free use of water, fresh or dried fruits should be used regularly. If the bowel is not irritated, the addition of foods containing some roughage, such as cabbage, celery and whole cereals, may help.

It is also necessary that the individual exercise daily. Exercises which bring into play the abdominal muscles are useful. A minimum of daily exercise maybe considered, such is an hour's walk.

The care of the teeth and hands are special points of personal cleanliness. The regular proper use of the tooth-brush to free the teeth of food particles and to massage the gums is required. The thorough washing of the hands before preparing or eating food is one of the simplest and most practical measures in preventing the spread of communicable diseases.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

"Sometimes when people censure me,

That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

High-lights on the meeting of the Administrative Committee of the Jewish Agency held in London, England, last week are taken from the Jewish Daily Bulletin as follows: The plan to settle 1,000 Jewish families this year on land owned by the Jewish National Fund was approved and $1,750,000 will be raised for this purpose independently of $5,000,000 planned as an internal bond issue. Among the resolutions submitted for the Political Committee by Dr. Cyrus Adler and unanimously adopted was one "asserting the principle that there shall be in Palestine no domination of Jews by Arabs, or of Arabs by Jews." Another resolution expressed the admiration of the Agency for the steadfastness shown by the Jewish population in Palestine during the riots and the will of world Jewry to continue the work begun in Palestine. The Agency declared its determination to do everything in its power for the realization of the Jewish National Home. The Agency also re-affirmed the declaration of the Twelfth Zionist Congress which expressed "the determination of the Jewish people to live with the Arab people in Palestine on terms of harmony and mutual respect and together to make the common home a flourishing community, the upbuilding of which may assure to each of its peoples an undisputed national development." The Agency declared that Jewish work in Palestine had brought great material and moral benefit to all sections of the population and that the Jewish people want to eliminate all misunderstanding between both races. Lord Melchett made the demand that before any larger colonization scheme be undertaken in Palestine the 1,500 Chalutzim there for many years be settled on the land. The Palestine labor wing took a great liking to Mr. Warburg and praised his practical sense and ability. His brother, Max Warburg, a Hamburg banker; Lord Melchett, Dr. Chaim Weizmann and Dr. Oscar Wasserman are other members of the Big Five. Lord Melchett said: "There is no step we should not take and no methods we should not try for enlisting further support for the budget. I sometimes wonder whether we have not become mechanized in our methods of raising money and whether there aren't new and other methods that could be introduced." He said it is important for the Jewish Agency to remember that the idea of the Agency has not yet thoroughly penetrated nor obtained the enthusiasm which was secured by the Zionist Organization under the old banner. The Agency could not afford "by any action to dampen down or deny to the great mass of Zionists the democratic support that Zionism is bringing to the Agency throughout the length and breadth of the world. It is useless to disguise the fact that there are external difficulties as a result of the terrible outbreaks of last year. We have to face a continual barrier to maintain our position which requires the greatest tact, patience and firmness in the future. We must show ourselves as a concrete and practical people ready to face existing difficulties and at the same time to make it as practical as we can to carry out the Mandate. Our work in Palestine is developing and there is no power on earth which could stop this from taking place. We must not always overestimate the violence of our opponents and attach too small a value to the support of large numbers of loyal and consistent friends who ally themselves to our cause."

* * *

The Montreal Federation of Jewish Philanthropies is $50,000 in debt at the end of the first three months of the year. It has had to support 100 additional families and faces the most serious situation it has found itself in in many years. The financial setback which numerous supporters of Federation suffered in the stock market crash is given as a main reason for the necessity of cutting down the allowances of families under Federation's care so that all would receive some help. Other Federations in American centres are complaining that they are short of funds. But the winter exodus of Federation supporters from all over to Florida and California and other playgrounds does not indicate that the problem of feeding the poor causes any strenuous self-denial on the part of those duty bound to help because they are the only ones who can. Does charity, the grave obligation recognized by the Jew, come first or last in a program of family expenditures?

* * *

One touch of card-playing makes the whole Jewish world akin and a discussion going in the Jewish Chronicle, of London, England, about gambling for charity might be held in almost any Jewish community on this side of the water. Some say that since people welcome an opportunity to gamble on varying scales, charity might better benefit from their craving than gaming houses or private individuals. Others say that gambling for charity has just as demoralizing an effect upon those who attend functions where it is expected that people will play for money as any sort of gambling has. They consider that the worst aspect is the spirit of eagerness and greed displayed by the players. It is admitted that women especially will often go to meetings for a cause chiefly because a raffle entices them. Of course, the people who gamble for money partly for sweet charity's sake and partly because they hanker for games of chance, are free, white and twenty-one. Guardianship over them smacks too objectionably of a mission to reform them. One aspect does seem bad for charity or other causes, however. People who attend small benefits for charity or a cause and gamble in its name do not do it for Federation because Federation frowns upon the social function as a means of acquiring contributions. People who are frequently asked to buy raffles for the good of a cause get the impression before the year is out that they have given more and done more for the world than they have actually. The yearly sum of ten dollars, for example, handed out in small amounts in order to get rid of nuisance requests in a hurry, becomes exaggerated in the mind of the person who buys raffles or plays cards for money in the name of a cause. Undoubtedly the many calls outside Federation or a Palestine appeal either lessen contributions to them or are used as the excuse for cutting down these contributions. F.F.C.

Claims the Rabbi is all Wrong

Montreal, March 23rd, 1930.

Editor,
Canadian Jewish Review,

Rabbi Harry J. Stern is still a new-comer in our community. This is evidenced by the comparisons he makes in his weekly cross-licks, against the Zionist Organization of Canada. Amongst the "Non-Zionists" in Montreal I am glad to say there can be found a Warburg in the person of Mr. Mark Workman, only the first named, is a conscious and active Zionist and Mr. Workman is not as yet. Then the reverse also holds true: amongst the Zionists of Canada not only one Lipsky could be found, but a score; Louis Fitch as an intellectual, as an orator, as a politically-trained mind, is an admirable match. A. J. Frieman as an organizer, as the bulwark of responsibility and idealism for active Zionism is another match. These two mentioned do not exhaust the list.

It is true we have not as yet a Stephen Wise, but it is well-known that great as Mr. Wise is, he is not fully appreciated by the "Non-Zionists" of America! . . . .

Now a branch of the Jewish Agency of Montreal at this moment is just a jest. If the contributors of the Federation who do not contribute to Zionism because they have no direct sympathy with political Zionism and the entire ideology of a Jewish National Home" desire forming a branch of the Jewish Agency, why have they not done so?

My answer is: because there are no such Jews in our community. We have Zionists, Zionist sympathizers and indifferentists towards Zionism. Who organized the Agency in the States? The Non-Zionists were invited to do so. Mr. Marshall then called conferences, appointed committees, negotiated with the Zionists, adjusted principles and finally assumed responsibilities. Those in Montreal at the present time who desire to organize a branch of the Jewish Agency, have not signified their intention of doing so, unless Rabbi Harry J. Stern is just taking the initiative . . . .

As to the Canadian Joint Relief Organization, same was largely composed amongst others of contributors to the Federation of Philanthropies who are classed by Rabbi Stern as "Non-Zionists" and therefore prospective members of the Jewish Agency. Why have these gentlemen forgotten their beloved organization and why does Rabbi Stern fail to summon them to take the initiative of launching an all Canadian Relief Campaign for Russia and Poland?

Trusting that you will grant the above, I am,

Yours truly,
H. M. Cohenman.

Y. W. H. A.

"Health and Exercise" was the subject dealt with by Dr. A. B. Illievitz in his lecture at the Y.W.H.A., 356 St. Urbain street, at the opening meeting of "health week," being sponsored by that organization. The speaker stressed the importance of exercise in relation to daily life, stating that it was not possible to crowd enough minutes during the day sufficient exercise for the twenty-four hours although even such a limited amount was better than none. In order to get best results, it is advisable to be in the fresh air when exercising if possible and care must be taken not to overdo any one set of exercises or sport to the exclusion of others, he said, and that is just as necessary to use discretion with regard to this matter, as it is to have a properly balanced diet.

A display of gymnastics was given by the members of the calisthenics and apparatus classes of the physical educational department, under the direction of Miss Bessie Klein. Miss Klein was presented with a watch by Mrs. and Miss Oliver, the pianist with a purse and flowers.

Miss Mary Krasnow was in the chair. Mrs. Lily Rothman gave a talk on the work of the Y.W.H.A. during which she stated that since the present building was opened last November, the registration has increased to nearly 1,500 women and girls.

Religious Beliefs Have New Trend Says Speaker

Modern industrialism has caused religions to come down from heaven to earth, new ideals and new patterns of living occasioning new religious beliefs, according to Professor Eustace Haydon, M.A., D.B., Ph.D., head of the department of comparative religion at the University of Chicago in his address, "A Non-Jew Looking In," before members of the Temple Emanu-El College of Jewish Studies, Sherbrooke street west, on the occasion of their closing exercises for the second session.

Professor Haydon dealt with the heritage of Judaism; the factors in this modern world which are compelling it and all religions to make readjustments; and the trend to new religious ideals. He emphasized the drifting towards the humanistic way of thinking of worldly rather than supernatural values. He believed that the tendency was to make the most of living in this world rather than to gamble with the chances of life in the hereafter.

One fact in particular, concerning the gradual effacing of the Orthodoxy in Judaism for the Liberal or Reform approach, struck Mr. Haydon, a non-Jew, as a logical sequence to present-day conditions. The Orthodox Jew, he pointed out, theoretically lives up to the letter of the divine decree. Present-day requirements, however, made it more and more difficult to continue along these lines.

All religions of the world are passing through a process of change, he continued, but Judaism has a peculiar problem of its own which makes it more difficult to adjust religious beliefs. He referred to the fact that the Jews are scattered throughout the world, identifying themselves with whatever group they happened to live among.

Conservative Jews, according to Mr. Haydon, are trying to preserve Jewish culture, dropping the authority and background of old customs and ideas and preserving the form as "folk ways." He spoke of the Reform Jews as a particular group which took over the fundamentals of their religion and adjusted them to new thoughts in a new age.

"The application of science to the material has created the modern machine. This in turn has altered the habits of the people, and makes the world quite different from that of our forefathers. Crime takes a new form; injustice and poverty are increased, while unemployment presents a crucial problem. The world today is so complicated that even the best-hearted man, in terms of old religious beliefs, could be classed as a pagan. God is, after all, a means to an end; and gods always change realization of the human values of life."

Professor Haydon defined the heritage of Judaism as the philosophy of the will of God. He said that God's will pointed towards the realization of the kingdom of righteousness, justice and peace on earth. "Israel is the suffering servant of God to hold these ideals before the eyes of all peoples," he concluded. Nathan Gordon, K.C., the chairman, thanked the speaker on behalf of the College of Jewish Studies, Temple Emanu-El.

"THE GIRL SAID NO" AT LOEWS NEXT WEEK

Echoes of the recent Wall Street catastrophy may be heard in William Haines newest all talking comedy "The Girl Said No" which opens at Loew's Theatre next Monday, and in which the wise cracking hero of filldom has the role of a boy fresh from college who tries to crash the portals of the financial market.

The picture is notable for its fast moving story rich humor and thrilling romance, but the outstanding appeal is the presence of a dozen of the screen's most famous and popular stars. Leila Hyams again captures the fans in the role of the college boy's sweetheart, playing Mary Howe the secretary of a leading Wall Street broker. Marie Dressler Polly Moran, Francis X Bushman Jr. Phillis Crane and William V. Mong are other notables in this brilliant cast.

Jack Sidney's Frolickers of 1930 lead off a wonderful aggregate of stage headliners on a program that represents the best of variety on the Loew circuit. The spring Festival is well away with such outstanding bills as that offered next week at Loew's Theatre.

Hold Balfour Memorial Service

At the Imperial theatre Sunday night a memorial service was held for Lord Balfour. In a Union Jack draped box were His Honor Lieutenant-Governor W. D. Ross, Mrs. Ross and Miss Isabel Ross, attended by Col. Fraser, A.D.C., and four members of the 59th Troop Boy Scouts. Mrs. Bert Wemp, wife of the mayor, was with the Government House party.

Messages of regret at inability to be present, were read from Premier W. L. Mackenzie King, who said that the Balfour Declaration on Palestine will rank as one of the most significant events of the present century, and from Sir William Mulock, Hon. N. W. Rowell, K.C., and Hon. Arthur Meighen. Rabbi Samuel Sachs, chairman, said the Jewish people would ever derive inspiration from the life of Lord Balfour, who could be termed a representative Englishman, a noble humanitarian, and great lover of the Jewish people. They would enshrine in their hearts the fragrance of the memory of a beautiful character, built up on goodness, breadth of vision, and generosity of heart. "His personality speaks from the grave, and radiates from beyond the tomb," said the rabbi.

Hadassah Hears Visitor Criticize Canadian Colleges

Addressing members of the local branch of Hadassah, Mrs. Archibald Silverman, vice-president of the Zionist Organization of America, said Jewish students are being socially ostracized in the universities of Canada and United States and that there was a world-wide persecution of Jews on social grounds.

"The Jews are the greatest pacifists in the world," the speaker said, "yet they have known less peace than any nation. Ostracism in the universities of Europe against Jewish boys and girls has reached a high pitch. They have even been stoned to death because of their race. It has not reached America yet, but there is still ostracism even in the universities of Canada and United States."

The Island Within

A Novel by Ludwig Lewisohn

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

"You are a nice man. You'll find cigarettes over there. Have you got any patients yet?"

He laughed. "No, but Eugene called me up to tell me that a very distinguished friend of his was coming to see me."

"Wonder who it'll be. I have a hunch it'll be Prout, the author of Hills of Morning."

"What makes you think so?"

"Oh; his actions the other night. I have these hunches about sexual things."

He looked into space. He had a silly sense that she was besmirching herself. "How can you have these hunches without any experience of your own?"

She insisted that that didn't seem to matter. Besides, there was experience and experience. He felt his cheeks and lips tingle; he wanted to know and dared not ask what these experiences were; he was evidently retroactively jealous of her. He tried to guide their talk in other directions, but she came back again and again to the question of the relations of men and women, especially of their physical relations and of the effects of these physical relations upon life and character. Her virginity was evidently an ache to her, an ache at least as much of the mind as of the body, and she resented this troubling wound and lack at the core of her and had cultivated a harsh, almost petulant hostility to men. She said things that seemed foolish to Arthur; she denied the bearing on life o fundamental biological facts; yet all her talk, even at its most wrong-headed, had an engaging quality, a blending of fine, precise speech with warmth. He stopped arguing. He came over and sat down beside her. Into her face came suddenly the frightened expression of a child, and he took her in his arms and kissed her. . . . He was amazed and thrilled and infinitely flattered at the intensity of her response. Her lips clung to his and her pupils dilated until her eyes looked black and she clutched her hands together around his neck. . . . Then suddenly she pushed him away with a peremptory, almost angry gestuse and told him to go. He asked her when he would see her.

"I don't know," she said and her mouth quivered a little like the mouth of a child. "I don't know. But I want you to go."

Two days later, toward sunset of a spring day, she came to see him. She had on a black suit with very straight lines and a little hat that accentuated the boyishness of her profile; she was exquisitely gloved and shod. She walked about his apartment like a strange, elegant lady who had come to see it; then she lightly touched things here and there. A faint perfume of heliotrope breathed from her. She seemed ethereal and aloof and more desirable than ever. She would not even sit down, asthough that would be a fatal concession, but consented to go out with him for a bite of dinner. The air was very clear and the sky edged with deep rose and fading orange and a faint tinge of green. From every tree set in the pavement here and there, from every tiny square of city-grass, came the fresh, sharp fragrance of life. Elisabeth said she wasn't hungry; she didn't care where they went. The world was so beautiful, so beautiful. That was enough. She could see the fields and ragged groves about her father's shabby parsonage; she could see herself as a little girl, hot and tired from play, hearing her mother calling her in for supper and stopping for a minute quite still, all by herself, a tiny mite of a girl in a terribly plain frock, overcome by the loveliness of earth and sky and the trees darkening against the afterglow. . . . There was something liquid in her eye as she evoked this vision of her childish self for him, and something free and noble and wistful. . . . They went to a small restaurant and she hardly touched the food, in spite of his urging, and went on talking about her childhood: how poor they had been and how her father was in his narrow way a perfect saint who had to be kept from giving his money and his clothes to any chance beggar, and how her mother, frail and burdened by poverty and children, had died early. It was an aunt, an intelligent but unlovable person, who had helped Elizabeth go to high school and then, even more half-heartedly, to college. At Barnard the girl had early been swept into the suffrage movement and had been for several years a paid agitator and organizer and had then been offered a newspaper job. "I never had a single nice thing—just plain, serviceable ones—until I bought them for myself. I love nice things." About all her talk was something fresh and lyrical and sad. She talked dreamily as though to herself. . . .

They walked back in the direction of Arthur's apartment. The stars were out now and Arthur could feel the throbbing of his heart and he heard himself say—distinctly heard his own voice—"I love you, Elizabeth." And the intoxication of those words was like no other intoxication he had ever felt; it was an intoxication in which one saw things as clearly and as intensely and as visionarily as in a dream. . . . The world of reality was drowned for the hour in another world that was magical and mad and overwhelmingly tangible, too. . . . He was not surprised that she went back to his apartment with him, nor that she entered, nor at her white, scarced face, nor at her utter yielding, nor at her straining to him, nor at her sweet ways or beauty of body. . . . Then the magic snapped. . . . She sat on the edge of the bed, wrapping a silk coverlet about her, her face haggard with pain and a touch of brooding horror. "Is that all?" She stifled a sob in her throat.

Arthur slipped into a dressing-gown. He tried to touch her, but she drew away from him. "Is that all?" There was something despairing in her level tone. He gave her a cigarette and lit it for her and took one himself. He begged her to listen to him. He told her that, from a medical point of view, a good deal of nonsense was talked in so-called radical circles about the freedom of love. He hadn't himself the slightest respect for laws and conventions; it didn't matter what seasoned people did with their lives. But the necessiy for marriage, not in law but in spirit, and for the intention of fidelity, was founded on the fact that in all but the rarest cases a woman who gave up her virginity found no pleasure in the act of love, only pain and disillusion, and that it required the continuous care and tenderness of a man who loved her to induce in her that subtle psychical and physical coördination of attention and consent and freedom from unconscious inhibition which would gradually ripen her for love. She looked at him with wide, hurt, hostile eyes.

"But a man always——"

He nodded. "Yes, always."

She asked him to go out so that she could dress. Fifteen minutes later she appeared quite as she had come. A faintly humorous apologetic smile was on her lips.

"You must think me an awful fool."

He shook his head. "You're sweet and adorable."

She pressed his hand. You're a nice, nice man. I'm terribly glad it was you." For the first time they kissed each other tenderly. She asked him not to bother about her for a few days. She wanted to think. She would be heard from.

IV

Prout came, as Elisabeth had predicted. Short and fat and fifty-five. He had on a very English suit and a silken waistcoat and dangled a monocle. He said that Arthur's apartment was charming, that his new book was already in its sixth-ninth thousand, that he hadn't really taken much stock in psycho-analysis. He had told 'Gene Adams nothing. But having met Dr. Levy the other night, he thought he'd drop in. There must be, no doubt there would be, the completest discretion. Arthur asked him to sit down. Prout hummed. Arthur looked out of the window and waited. Prout began again to talk irrelevantly.

Arthur said, gently, "Anything to do with sex?"

Prout looked up. "How did you know?"

"I didn't, but it's not uncommon."

Prout leaned forward and groaned. Well, yes. Yes. He wanted to marry again. A lovely young actress of less than thirty. Not conventional, of course — neither one of them. They had gone off for a week-end together. He had been most frightfully humiliated — oh, most frightfully. A thing unheard of. God! what an experience! At the very recollection sweat gathered on the fat man's forehead. The thing was indescribably ghastly, he said, indescribably.

Complete psychical impotence?" Arthur asked.

Prout barked. "Yes, damn it, yes."

"I suppose," Arthur said slowly, "that we can dismiss at the outset any physical factors, such as venereal infection in youth!"

"Absolutely, doctor, absolutely. Christ, yes!" He leaned forward, breathed heavily.

Arthur spoke with firm yet gentle decision. It was his first important case. If he could use the Adler short-cut here and avoid a long psycho-therapeutic process it might be the beginning of a practice. . . . He explained to Mr. Prout that the phenomenon he deplored was in nearly all cases psychical in origin and hence curable. There is something in his relation to a woman, let us say, that the patient will not admit to himself, will not permit to rise into the field of consciousness at all. Then the organs of the body will take up the cause of this suppressed truth and speak for it by functioning wrongly or refusing to function. This speech of the organs of the body can be silenced by the expression of the cause of their speech through another channel. . . .

Prout sat up. His eyes were wide open. "Very interesting; very plausible. Go ahead, Doctor."

"When you were alone with that young woman in the country did her conduct in that intimacy disappoint you and jar on you?"

Prout gasped.

"Understand, Doctor, she's a wonder. But——"

Arthur went to the other end of the room. He heard Prout breathing hard.

"She's so disorderly. Never could find anything. Left her brushes and combs on the mantelpiece, couldn't find stockings to match. Ugh! If there's anything——"

"And has that sort of thing played a part in your life before?"

Prout got up. He roared in unconscious joyous liberation: "Has it? For eleven years I was married to a slovenly. It nearly killed me. I'm paying the bitch alimony yet!"

Arthur came back. "For a man of your insight I need hardly say more. You were afraid you were making a desparate mistake a second time. You didn't want to admit it to yourself. So your body made the admission for you. You're probably cured now. If not, come back to me."

Prout got up, happy but sheepish. He had evidently nursed the most desparate fears. "What do I owe you, Doctor?"

"I'll send you a bill by and by."

Jauntily the novelist departed. Arthur could almost have prayed that the method he had employed would succeed. The case seemed clear enough; he had read of not a few like it in the journals. But no record approaches the vividness of experience. The moral benefit to himself of a successful cure would be inestimable.

The afternoon sunlight made his apartment seem forlorn. That brilliancy ought to be peopled. He thought of Elisabeth, of course, but he could never reach her until evening. Also, ought he not to wait for a sign from her? The vision of her gave him a faint sense of guilt. He hadn't been home in nearly a week. His mother must be lonely. Hazel and her husband were living in Boston, and since his sister was expecting a baby she rarely came now.

He found his mother crocheting in a seat by the window of her drawing room. She pointed to her work with a smile. "For Hazel's baby."

He nodded "Everything going nicely in Boston?"

His mother's face grew grave. "Between them, yes. He's a fine boy. And maybe Hazel's condition makes her see black. But she's terribly lonely. I'm going over to stay with her next week. She has no friends."

"Why do you suppose that is?" he asked.

She shrugged her shoulders. "People don't like Jews in Boston. Especially in Brookline where the children live. They don't know a single one of their neighbors."

"But there must be plenty of Jews in Boston?"

"Of course. But Hazel doesn't like the ones she's met. You know the Simheimers are from Posen themselves." She lowered her voice slightly.

"But didn't our grandfather Levy come from Poland, too?"

"Yes. But those were other days. And he was from a fine rabbinical family. But Hazel says she thinks Mrs Simheimer was a dienst, a servant, in the old country."

About all this there seemed something dreadfully wrong and even corrupt to Arthur. But he could not say so to his mother who sat there with her graying hair, elegant, composed with that touch of dignity which she never lost.

"Stay to dinner, sonny. Papa'll be glad to see you."

He agreed to stay very gladly. He suddenly had the feeling that he wanted very much to have a talk with his father, as though, in truth, his father was the repository of some neglected wisdom.

When they were sitting at table he told, by discreet indications, the story of his first patient.

"A goy!" his father asked.

"Why, yes!"

"I'm surprised."

"Why?"

"You esk me vy? De vay things are going in dis country I never would have believed possible. Vy, a Christian boy or girl can't get a chob any more. Dey come to our office every day. Ve say ve have no opening. Dey hang us for anyting. Vy? No Christian will take dem. Dere are more ent m[illegible] apartment houses going up every day vere a Chew can't get in; in de country dey have restricted residential parts. Same reason. To keep us out. In de colleges— But don't you read nor hear nottings?
